

Nobody can eat just one . . .

“We are free to take drugs or not. But once we choose to use a habit-forming drug, we are bound to the consequences of that choice. Addiction surrenders later freedom to choose. Through chemical means, one can literally become disconnected from his or her own will!”

Elder Russell M. Nelson

(“Addiction or Freedom,” Ensign Nov. 1988, 6)

Nobody can eat just one . . .

“We are free to take drugs or not. But once we choose to use a habit-forming drug, we are bound to the consequences of that choice. Addiction surrenders later freedom to choose. Through chemical means, one can literally become disconnected from his or her own will!”

Elder Russell M. Nelson

(“Addiction or Freedom,” Ensign Nov. 1988, 6)

Nobody can eat just one . . .

“We are free to take drugs or not. But once we choose to use a habit-forming drug, we are bound to the consequences of that choice. Addiction surrenders later freedom to choose. Through chemical means, one can literally become disconnected from his or her own will!”

Elder Russell M. Nelson

(“Addiction or Freedom,” Ensign Nov. 1988, 6)

Nobody can eat just one . . .

“We are free to take drugs or not. But once we choose to use a habit-forming drug, we are bound to the consequences of that choice. Addiction surrenders later freedom to choose. Through chemical means, one can literally become disconnected from his or her own will!”

Elder Russell M. Nelson

(“Addiction or Freedom,” Ensign Nov. 1988, 6)